GOVERNOR BICKETT

The passing of Governor Bickett to eternal rest removes from the state and from the companionship of his friends not only a most illustrious citizen and sterling Democrat, but one of the most congenial and companionable of men. Even those who differed with him delighted to be in his company, for he possessed a fund of humor and a personality that was irresistible.

Governor Bickett was one of the state's best lawyers and speakers. He had a reputation far beyond the confines of this state as an orator. Men and women sat under the spell of his matchless eloquence, and never for a moment lost interest in his discourse. There was never a moment when he was not saying something either in a serious or humorous vein to point a moral, or make emphatic what he was endeavoring to impress.

While North Carolina possesses other great speakers and great citizens the memory of Governor Bickett as a statesman, orator and companion will live long in the minds of the people, and especially in the hearts of those who learned to love him because of his friendship and wonderful comradeship and companionship.

CO-OPERATIVE MARKETING

The impetus behind co-operative marketing indicates that it will prove a success, and that it has come to stay. The drive this week over the state, is a round up preparatory for the organization to follow during this month, when the farmers will meet and elect their board of directors who in turn will elect their officers to manage the Association, very much like any other corporation, for it is an association or corporation organized under the laws of the state of North Carolina.

Undoubtedly, as the Times has written for more than thirty years, the only way to guarantee prices is to control the selling end, for the law of supply and demand will not admit of sustaining prices when the weight of commodities break them down. It is unreasonable to suppose that a man will pay the top price for anything when it is offered to him for the taking. The farmer does not do that. The prices of other commodities are fixed by the producer of those commodities while those of the farmer are fixed by the buyer, and he of course is trying to find bottom rather than the top. Since the prosperity of the farmer means the prosperity of all every one will wish him success in his undertaking.

DR. KILGORE AND

MR. LARRY MOORE

was evident from the experience of Kentucky where 90 per cent of the Burley tobacco growers had joined the association, and that every warehouse in that state except six had entered the organization and their property had been transferred to the association and would be used for receiving, and storage of tobacco.

The farmers of North Carolina have made up their minds to sell their tobacco and cotton, and to try a different plan from the one heretofore in vogue, which has not caused them to receive a fair return for their labor, and turn to something else which promises better things. The public too has decided to give the farmers a chance, and with these two things working together, success for the movement is assured.

Dr. Kilgore declared that cooperative marketing is not a new thing, neither is it an experiment, that it had been tried successfully in Denmark and in a number of countries in Europe for more than sixty years. California had successfully tried the plan for twenty five years, and as a result had rooted North Carolina out of second place, for it mattered not how much is made, it is what is received for the produce and by reason of proper marketing and holding until the demand met the supply, the farmers of California had made of their state one of the leading agricultural sections of the country and her people the most prosperous.

Dr. Kilgore said the President of the United States was behind cooperative marketing, and devoted a part of his message to it, and declared that one of the great troubles with agriculture was in the improper marketing and distribution of the products of the farm. He also read extracts from Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace, who said that he had received messages from relatives, and reports from newspapers and travelers, and that all spoke of the fact that California through cooperative marketing had stood the depression better than any state in the union.

Quoting from Secretary Wallace, the latter said, "Traders are interested generally in a lower price. They sell in large volume, and find it easier to handle produce in large quantities at a lower price than a higher price, therefore when conditions are suitable to a decline, the downward trend is easy."

Dr. Kilgore stated that he had visited California and had seen the workings of the system and is impressed that it is the only way. He had been working in this state for thirty years to help the farmers and knew a great many farmers in different parts of the state, and they are his friends, and that he would not advocate something he had not studied and believed entirely satisfactory and to the farmers interests.

Dr. Kilgore then described the financing end of the plan. He said that the Cooperative Marketing Association is a business proposition and organized under the laws of North Carolina, the last legislature passing an act that so appealed to the Kentucky growers that the Burley people had organized under our laws. He said that he went north and interviewed the bankers of New York on the subject and they told him they had rather have cotton and tobacco as security than California fruits, since the fruit is liable to spoil, and if the price is too high people will not buy. Besides tobacco and cotton are a necessity and further both are practically imperishable, and the bankers said their security is much safer. He said that the bankers of New York, the War Finance Board and the local banks who are expected to pass on the securities will finance the association in this state, which is a member of the tri-state organization. He added that other buyers of cotton and tobacco draw drafts and sell cotton and tobacco and asked why the farmers could not do it, if they were organized under a proper business basis.

Dr. Kilgore paid his respects to the warehousemen of Wilson. He said that he read an advertisement saying they would open in September, 1922, for the sale of tobacco. They had a perfect right to do that, but the Cooperative Association would sell the next crop, or at least a large part of it, and the farmer who did not sell through the Cooperative Association might regret that he had not come to the assistance of his brother farmer. He urged all those who had not joined to do so, since it was better to make it unanimous, but cooperative marketing would prove a success.

Dr. Crocker then presented Hon. Larry Moore as a former Wilson county man and deeply interested in the farmer. Mr. Moore made a rousing good speech. He said among other things that the products of every other business is founded on the basis of cost, while the products of the farmer are founded on what some one else is willing to pay for it, and as a result prices decline. Other industries fix their price and sell by that price, and the produce of the farmer is at the mercy of every man interested in it, and on account of a selling and distributing organization the farmers products are the football of trade and commerce. Why should the price of cotton be fixed in Liverpool and New York by those who manufacture it? The manufacturers do not allow you to say what you shall pay for their goods.

We regret that time and space will not admit a more extended notice of his address.

REPORT OF CHRISTMAS WORK WITH THE NEEDY

This Christmas, 1921, was without doubt the best Christmas from the standpoint of helping the poor that Wilson has experienced for years. With a total of 316 persons in the city and county helped and 241 (estimated) helping, including 59 missionary circle women, 50 Kiwanians and 132 Sunday School pupils and teachers all the families that we could learn about were supplied. The baskets not only had the regular Christmas confections, but the more substantial things also, groceries, clothing, shoes, etc., while wood and coal were ordered in some instances. It is conservatively estimated that fully $500 was spent to make the season happier to those less fortunate.

For weeks before Christmas every means was used to get the list complete. The public school teachers, Sunday schools, local agencies and individuals were busy using every effort to see that no one was overlooked. Mrs. Barrett deserves special mention for her untiring efforts. On this list there were 58 families both white and colored. In addition to this the county home with 15 inmates and the stockade and jail with 80 prisoners were not overlooked.

Dr. W. S. Anderson has made it a custom for years to go to the county home on Christmas eve and present gifts to the old people. The inmates look forward to his coming every year. In addition the civic department of the Woman's Club, both white and colored gave Christmas trees to their respective races, the Presbyterian church circles gave boudoir caps to the women and handkerchiefs to the men. On Thursday before Christmas a class from the public school sang carols in the home and Miss Daphne Carraway told Christmas stories.

The stockade was well supplied by the Wesley Bible class of the Methodist church. This is an annual custom for the class.

To take care of those who could not be supplied otherwise the following was subscribed:

MUST BE IN BY NINE O'CLOCK.
Again we request our advertisers to send in their changes for advertisements to appear that day by 9 o'clock in the morning. Half or full page ads. should be turned in not later than 5:00 o'clock on the day prior to the date to be inserted. This is imperative on account of the fact that it is almost impossible for us to handle the day's edition satisfactorily since we cannot possibly tell when advertisements come in later than that the size of the paper to be issued for that day.

It is our desire to give our people the very best service and to do this with advertisements coming in all through the day it is well nigh a physical impossibility. We hope and trust our business men if they cannot prepare their advertisements for the day the night before will attend to this the first thing in the morning after they reach their offices.

WHO KNOWS?

When we were a boy we remember there was a grave yard in a piece of woods just back of Pender street, filled with graves of soldiers that we were told died of smallpox in the hospital, that was used afterwards for a school, later by Prof. S. Hassell. What has ever become of that graveyard? If they were Confederate soldiers we have never heard of their being moved and have never known of these graves being decorated. I don't think they were moved when the others were, for fear of smallpox.

A short distance from this plat were two graves enclosed with a fence, which we were told was the wife and daughter of Lem Taborn, who died at this time with smallpox. Lem lived many years and conducted a barber shop in his last days where Carolina building now stands. He died respected by all who knew him. His second wife Edmona is still living.
